Dr. Lee is an assistant professor in Suzanne Dworak-Peck School of Social Work at the University of Southern California. Her research has focused on the etiology of substance use, heterogeneity in life course pathways among low SES families, and the intersection between substance use and life course pathways in vulnerable populations. Dr. Lee will discuss 1) employment instability and substance use problems, and 2) maternal substance use and its intergenerational impact on teen mothers and their offspring.